In 2017, the Live. Work. Play. Housing Area of Focus successfully advocated for the initiation of a feasibility study for a Storm Water Utility (SWU). A SWU is a unified entity formed to manage storm drainage for the entire city, connecting the existing patchwork system of drainage, which creates significant flooding and environmental issues in streams and lakes and presents major infrastructure obstacles for housing developers. The Housing Area of Focus also helped gain the Anchorage Planning and Zoning Commission approval for an ordinance that would make it easier for homeowners to build Accessory Dwelling Units, also known as "mother-in-law apartments." These units would allow for increased housing options for young people and seniors looking for smaller scale housing in residential areas.

This Workforce Development Area of Focus hosted three Job Skills Boot Camp programs, half-day sessions led by local business leaders and intended to provide soft skills and professionalism training to job seekers in low-income/high-unemployment areas. In January 2017, the Workforce Development Area of Focus completed Anchorage's first-ever Internship Playbook, a manual for employers who want to create or improve internship programs and connect with each other to provide training opportunities for students and early career employees.

Trails & Transit Area of Focus

The Trails Initiative of Live. Work. Play. raised $200,000 in sponsorships towards the new Trails Wayfinding project, which includes building and installing maps and signs along the Anchorage trail system (see an example to the right,) to help residents and visitors get around safely. Mile markers were installed along the Chester Creek trail in summer 2017, and the remainder of the signs will be installed on the Chester Creek and Coastal Trails in 2018. The LWP Trails Initiative also partnered with the Community Safety Area of Focus to host two trails safety events, promoting membership in Trail Watch and teaching trail users strategies to safely intervene in potentially dangerous situations.
